OMLP Train the Trainer Seminar

Day 1

Arrival

Greetings

from Svetlana Drenska on behalf of SBC.

Introductions

and presentation of the agenda and organizational aspects of the training with Stoyan Drenski.

Trainer profiles & background discussed within the group. Each trainers' experience and strengths in focus.

Learning, today and tomorrow (1)

Today	Tomorrow
Learning is a series of corporate programs built around designed content and approved experts.	Learning is an "environment" and an "experience", leveraging experts, content, and materials sourced and recommended by external communities as well as by other employees and internal experts.
The learning environment is managed by a corporate learning management system – essentially a large catalog filled with courses.	The learning environment feels like a consumer website that provides videos, courses, content, and access to experts – as well as recommendation engines that help people find precisely what they need.
Internal experts push out training, identifying required courses to be completed by employees based on roles.	Employees pull learning, navigating and accessing opportunities from inside and outside of the company.
The focus is on internal training sanctioned by the company.	External training is available from any digital content source.

Corporate- vs. Self- learning explained by Ralitsa Koleva with details on the similarities and differences between company and single users of omlp.

Technical requirements to run omp

Summarized by Chris Balavessov. Explaining the current supported configurations and overviewing expected future changes.

Installing omp on trainer devices

Group exercise to test the installation process on different piloting devices. Various Android versions (4.1 up to 6.0) and phone factors (4" small- screen smartphones up to 10" wide-screen tablets) selected.

Testing omp on the go by the trainers. Testing the mobile application and its usability on the go.
